"POWDERED CHICKENS"
Two Reel Century Comedy
Featuring Edna Marian

Edna loves her neighbor's fat son from infancy. She leaves him at the dividing fence to milk the family cow with a pump. When finished, bossie kicks her into her sweetheart's yard, plumb into a bale of hay. She runs around with only her feet showing, almost scaring her sweetie to feath, until the hay is removed.

Her father spends his time trying to concoct a chicken feed which will make hens lay all the time. When he finishes it, he hands it to Edna. Going into the barnyard she meets a city slicker with slips T N T into the mixture while her head is coyly turned.

The next day the barnyard is covered with eggs. When the family finally starts to pick them up they explode, driving them all to cover. The old man tries his formula again and it proves successful. He orders a flivver from town. It comes crated. Sweetie appears and offers to run it, studying the book on the way. He refuses to have them uncrate it, insisting that it is a new style bumper.

The family goes to town, gets entangled in traffic, but manages to get home, alive-- with clothes for most of the village. A brandance is given and a troupe of stranded chorus girls entertain for a sandwich each. The villain appears, puts liquor in the punch and at the height of the hilarity, he tries to enter father's laboratory. Sweetie discovers him and after a running battle, captures him. Then Edna accepts her sweetie.
